

TULLOCH

TULLOCH RE-LAUNCHES ANOTHER FAMOUS OLD BLEND

This month, Tulloch Wines re-launches another classic old Hunter wine, with the release of the 2008 Hunter River White (RRP $22/bottle ~ 1895 Wine Club Members $17.60/bottle), a wine that was last made under the Tulloch label over 50 years ago.

The Hunter River White label was first used by Hector Tulloch in 1952, along with its now infamous brother wines, the Pokolbin Dry Red and Private Bin Pokolbin Dry Red, which were re-launched in 2003 and 2005 respectively.

Jay Tulloch, Managing Director of the 113 year old company, J.Y. Tulloch & Sons says, "We have enjoyed enormous success recently by returning to our roots and making classic styles of Hunter wine, and the Hunter River White is no exception. We are proud of our heritage and the same principles we applied to making these great wines in the 50's, we are still applying with success today."

The grapes for 2008 Hunter River White were grown on the alluvial flats of the Hunter River, as they were for the great Hunter River Whites from the 1950's.

Hunter River White was then made from a blend of mainly Semillon, together with small quantities of Chardonnay (then known as White Pinot) and Verdelho, depending on seasonal conditions. This tradition continues today with the first re-release of this wine a blend of Chardonnay, with select parcels of Semillon and Verdelho.

The first blend under the Tulloch label for many years, it is crisp with a vibrant lift and delicate palate weight. Future vintages of this wine will be made according to seasonal conditions and the best of the select parcels of fruit available.

Hector Tulloch's philosophy was to make table wines to be enjoyed with food, a custom which continues with this wines fresh, flavoursome palate and dry finish.

The release of the Hunter River White continues Tulloch's commitment to our heritage of producing outstanding Hunter Valley wine styles. The return to our old label designs, like those of the Pokolbin Dry Red wines, maintains our theme of, "all that's old is new again".

TULLOCH WINES

638 DeBEYERS ROAD, POKOLBIN NSW 2320

Telephone: 02 4998 7580 Email: cellardoor@tullochwines.net

Web: www.tulloch.com.au